OCTOBER 2014

Volume 9, Issue III

2014 OSBA Central Region Exemplary School District Employee of the Year!

Please join Superintendent, David Hile, the Licking Valley Board of Education, and the State of Ohio in congratulating Jo Lynn Torbert for being honored Wednesday evening September 24th as a 2014 OSBA Central Region Exemplary School District Employee of the Year! Jo Lynn, in her 33rd year as LV Treasurer, was nominated and won the award for her tireless dedication to and passion for the LV Schools, and because she is a respected mentor to other treasurers around the state.

Congratulations, Jo!

Anne Carmer, Licking Valley's "2014 Dow Excellence in Education Award Winner

ajeffries@newarkadvocate.com

For the last 27 years, the Dow Chemical Co. has partnered with the Licking County Educational Service Center to honor teachers from every county school district. Many of the teachers honored focus on science, technology, engineering and math, said Andy Maynard, an operations leader at Dow's Licking River Film Center.

"We feel very passionately that in order to solve the issues of today and tomorrow, we need to encourage students to grow and learn with the help of great teachers like these," he said.

Maynard helped present each teacher honored with an apple trophy and a $250 check to use for whatever they wanted.

He told the award winners his wife and both his parents are teachers so he understands how much hard work goes into it.

Congratulations, Anne!

Anne Carmer, fifth grade math and science teacher with husband Todd Carmer and son Brice

PSAT

The PSAT (practice SAT) will be offered at Licking Valley on the morning of Wednesday, October 15. All sophomores will be taking the test. It is optional for junior students. Juniors may want to register to get a feel for what the SAT is like if they are considering taking the SAT. Junior students are also included in the National Merit Scholarship program. Sophomores are not included in the NM Scholarship contest.

Junior students can register in the counseling office beginning tomorrow by bringing $14 to Shelly. Spots are limited. LVHS has five fee waivers for juniors who receive free or reduced lunch. If you receive free or reduced lunch and want to take the PSAT for free, see Mrs. Garver.

Counseling Office Calendar/College Rep Visits

Please bookmark the counseling office website! http://bit.uz/9A6

We regularly update the website with resources and information for students and parents. One important feature is the calendar on the main page. Check our calendar regularly to see what is happening at the high school. Juniors are invited to attend the visits with college representatives that are posted on our website. If you see a posted visit you want to attend, stop down to the counseling office about a week ahead of time to sign up with Shelly. She will give you a permission slip to have signed by your classroom teacher. Just have it signed and turn it back in before the day of the visit. (Keep in mind, while our teachers are very supportive and encouraging of students going to college visits, there may be certain times they don't want you to miss class. It is their right to tell you no.)

ACT Registration

Students who are planning to attend college are encouraged to take the ACT for the first time as a junior. Licking Valley offers the test both in October and April. If you are interested in taking the October test, the deadline to register is this Friday, September 19 at midnight. Students can register at www.actstudent.org. We strongly recommend you take the writing section of the test the first time you take the ACT. Students who receive free or reduced lunch qualify for two fee waivers for the ACT (and two for the SAT) in their lifetime. Those students can pick up their fee waivers in the counseling office.

Healthy Hunger-Free Kids Act

hsparling@newarkadvocate.com

There seems to be a consensus among students at Licking Valley High School: The burritos are pretty tasty; the succotash, not so much; and they want more french fries.

Across the country, students in kindergarten through 12th grade are being served healthier lunches as a result of the Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act. The bill — passed in 2010 but still being updated — puts stricter limits on sodium, calories and fat. Now, sandwiches go on whole-grain rich bread rather than white bread; milk is 1 percent or fat-free; and menu planners have fruit/vegetable quotas.

In Licking Valley lunchrooms, the new rules meant the end of a la carte. No more lunches consisting solely of french fries and Ho-Hos. No more Choco Tacos. It was a tough sell at first, but students adapted, and ultimately, the school is probably better off, said Jan Jennings, cafeteria supervisor.

There are some fruits and vegetables going in the trash now, but overall, students are eating healthier, and most don't seem to mind — or even notice — the new, healthier guidelines, Jennings said.

"Back when we were first starting the changes, it was like, 'What do you mean we can only have three packets of ketchup? What do you mean?' "she said. "Now, it's just the norm. ... We are here to serve meals. We were honestly doing the kids an injustice by allowing them to buy just an ice cream sandwich."

Let's Move!

The Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act is part of first lady Michelle Obama's Let's Move! initiative, which targets child-hood obesity. The guidelines are precise — vegetables, for example, are broken down into five subgroups: dark green, red and orange, beans and peas, starchy and "other." The rules seem to shift often, and sometimes, it's difficult to keep up with the changes, Jennings said.

"How many red vegetables can you come up with?" she asked. "And red vegetables that they're going to eat?"

Some schools have gone as far as to drop out of the federal free and reduced-price lunch program as a result of the changes, saying students won't eat the healthier fare and it's all going in the trash. Those districts — typically wealthier schools that can afford to lose the federal funding — are left either absorbing the cut themselves or passing it on to students through higher lunch prices.

Fort Thomas Independent Schools in Kentucky dropped the program this year, with superintendent Gene Kirchner saying kids looked at the lunches and said, "I'm not going to eat that." Fort Thomas will absorb the cost itself, roughly $260,000 a year, offering lunches at the same price to students, Kirchner said.

Township High School District 214, the second-largest school district in Illinois, also dropped out this year, forfeiting nearly $1 million in federal funding, according to CBS reports.

It's difficult to quantify the number of districts that have left the program, but it appears to be a small — albeit growing — number: only about 0.15 percent of schools nationwide, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

In Licking County, it doesn't appear dropping the program is a possibility. At Newark City Schools, for example, 62 percent of students are classified as economically disadvantaged, according to Ohio Department of Education data. Among Licking County's 10 public school districts, 34.8 percent of students are economically disadvantaged, ranging from Newark at the high end to Granville Exempted Village Schools, where just 4.3 percent are economically disadvantaged, data show.

Asked if they could consider dropping out of the lunch program, officials at Valley, Newark and Heath City Schools all said no. They simply couldn't afford it.

Hitting the pocketbook

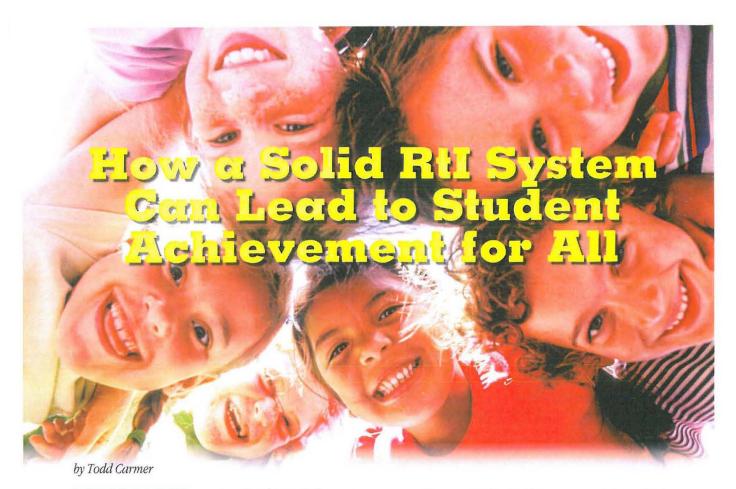

The catch is that while local schools can't afford to drop the program, it's still costing them more to stay in. Fresh fruit, vegetables and whole-grain bread cost more than what schools were serving in the past, and food prices seem to only be rising, said Lindy Banks, Heath City Schools food service director. Banks' produce bill used to be about $400 or $500 a month, she said: now, it's closer to $800.

Banks said she also has noticed slightly more waste now that students have to take fruits and vegetables. She tries to cut down on that by offering more choices and traveling lunchroom to lunchroom, sitting down with students and asking them what they want to eat. Then, within the guidelines, she does her best to feed them what they want.

"Let them buy into the planning of it. They feel included, and it makes a world of difference," she said. "I believe that they're adapting better to it than they were at first. ... We eased into these guidelines before they were actually set in stone."

Ultimately, Banks and Jennings said the lunchroom is better off under the new guidelines. A little less lucrative? Perhaps. A few more apples in the trash? Yes. But a lot healthier for students.

Congress passed the Hunger-Free Kids Act in 2010 with bipartisan support to help ensure every American child had access to the nutrition they need to grow into healthy adults. One goal of the law was to help reduce America's childhood obesity epidemic and reduce health risks for America's children by helping schools across the country produce balanced meals so children had access to healthy foods during the school day. USDA based the new school meal standards on independent, expert recommendations from the Institute of Medicine to ensure kids are being fed healthy food while they are at school.

One of our biggest challenges as a K–2 primary building has been to create an effective RtI program that would integrate our assessments, curriculum, and interventions in a way that would allow no students to fall through the proverbial crack. Through building our RtI system, we were able to strengthen our Intervention Assistance Team (IAT) process while improving communication with teachers and supporting our district's vision of "Every adult helping every child learn and grow every day."

The first and most important thing we did was to align our grading periods to our assessment cycle. We went to a three-grading-period (trimester) schedule, allowing us to assess three times a year. This allowed us to have data when we needed it. We use the NWEA MAP assessments in reading and math and also the DRA-2 reading assessment. We also aligned our grade cards to the Common Core State Standards, giving us several pieces of data to make informed decisions about student progress. We then created what we call RtI "check-in" meetings, which are scheduled after each assessment cycle. The school psychologist, the guidance counselor, and I meet with teachers during their planning time to go over each student's data and pinpoint students who may potentially be brought up for IAT in the future. Our assessments allow us to measure how far behind a particular student may be, which then determines the amount of time allotted for interventions. Next, we discuss specific interventions the teachers can begin and how to best progress monitor their progress and keep accurate data. Our first assessment cycle is completed at the end of September, so we are able to identify potential struggling students very early in the school year. One of the challenges we've had in the past is finding appropriate interventions for our process. We found that simply giving teachers regular opportunities to have instructional conversations allowed us to quickly build up a collection of interventions that are shared across grade levels and subject areas. My teachers have become much more comfortable with the process and now often come to IAT meetings with interventions already well under way, helping our meetings to be much more efficient and productive.

Building an effective RtI system has taken us three years and a lot of trial and error. Everything in our system is done in "threes." We have three grading periods, three assessment cycles, and three sets of check-in meetings. This structure allows us to have conversations about every student, regardless of when they come to our school. Teachers now know that these conversations are a regular part of each school year, which creates accountability for them to know the strengths and weaknesses of every one of their students. We have seen the benefits of our system through a reduced number of students evaluated and qualified for special education and higher student achievement among all students. RtI used to be something the teachers dreaded to hear, but now it has truly become one of the most important things we do.

Todd Carmer has been in education for more than twenty years eleven as a middle school teacher and nine as a building principal. He is currently the principal at Licking Valley Primary School in Newark. You may reach him by e-mail at carmert@lickingvalley.k12.oh.us.

The following Leader Alert email message went to all parents on September 5, 2014:

Just a friendly reminder for all Licking Valley parents....Bus passes for students to ride different buses than those they are scheduled to ride are for emergency situations ONLY. A student wanting to spend the night at a friend's house is not such a situation. Many of our buses are already at capacity, and adding extra students puts them in a great deal of danger, and is against the law. ALL requests for passes MUST be directed to Mickie Archer, Director Of Transportation. She may be reached in her office at 763-3775, at the garage at 763-3743, or by email at archerm@lickingvalley.k12.oh.us. Please make all requests as much in advance as possible so that we can determine whether the request can be approved. Thank you for your cooperation.

The Licking Valley Marching Band has seen a nice jump in the number of students marching this year.

Eighty-eight students signed up to march in 2014, a significant increase from the 73 students who marched last year.

It's a welcome growth, said Sean Bradley, the band's director.

"The growth over the last four years has really allowed us to have a much bigger musical and visual impact," Bradley said.

From Bradley's perspective, the band is on its way to having a spectacular season. Not only is the band sounding great, but the students are working hard and having fun, he said.

"The music is very challenging and not originally songs that the students were familiar with, so the show allowed a lot of room for music education," Bradley said. "They have been given a huge challenge with the show design and music book this year but they are all stepping up and working toward becoming superior."

This Year's Show

• Theme: "Salvation"

 Songs include: Original music by Scott Hickey, the "Dias Irae" from Verdi's "Requiem," "Salvation is Created" by Pavel Tchesnokov, and the finale from Igor Stravinsky's "Firebird Suite."

This year's Competitions

- Sept. 20: Bands of America Regional, Gateway High School, Monroeville, Pennsylvania
- Sept. 27: Licking Valley Band Fest
- Oct. 4: Bands of America Regional, University of Toledo
- Oct. 18: River View Marching Band Festival
- Oct. 18: Meadowbrook High School Marching Band Festival

Director

 Sean Bradley has directed the band for four years. He received a Bachelor of Music in Music Education and Performance from Capital University, a Master of Music in Instrumental Conducting from Eastern Kentucky University and a Doctor of Educational Leadership from University of Phoenix. Last year, he was awarded the Coughlin Automotive "You Make a Difference Award" for Licking Valley School District.

Fun Fact

• Bradley thinks the band is on its way to making this marching show the best it has ever performed.

The Elementary Library challenged every Intermediate student to read last summer.

This month all the minutes were added up and a Pizza Party was held for all the participants. A Kindle Fire was given to the student who read the most minutes. The winner was Justin Higgins with 18,660 minutes.

Each grade level also had a winner that received gift certificates. Nathaniel Higgins with 9,136 minutes, Owen Dorogi with 2,606 minutes, and Brody Bishop with 2,055 minutes

BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

The Licking Valley Intermediate students gathered at the flag pole on Friday, September 12 for the Bicentennial celebration of the words of the Star Spangled Banner, written by Francis Scott Key. Key wrote the poem about the flag at Ft. McHenry on September 14, 1814 after one the fiercest battles in the War of 1812, the battle which helped to turn around the outcome of the war.

Students learned about the Bicentennial in Music class as well as morning announcements given by students. At the flagpole, students not only sang the National Anthem (which is one verse of the Star Spangled Banner) but sang Happy Birthday to the words. It was a very patriotic moment for our students!

One Big Change in Ohio Education

by Mark McDaniel, Director of Student Services

During the current school year, Ohio introduced its new set of state tests for students in grades 3-12. These tests will be administered in computer and paper formats. The goal of the new tests is to measure the student progress towards Ohio's New Learning Standards. Our hope is that the data we receive back from these tests will show how our students are doing on the new standards and that they are getting the knowledge and skills they need for future success. I have also included a Fact Sheet that gives you a little more information about these new tests.

You can find out more information at the Ohio Department of Education website for parents at www.education.ohio.gov/Parents

WHAT'S CHANGING IN OHIO EDUCATION Ohio's Elementary and High School State Tests

This school year Ohio launches a new generation of computer-based state tests in English language arts, mathematics, science and social studies.

What are they?

State tests measure student progress toward Ohio's New Learning Standards. The results show whether students have the knowledge and skills necessary to move successfully to their next steps in education or a career.

State tests are the Ohio Achievement Assessment for third-grade reading and the Ohio Graduation Tests for students who entered ninth grade before July 1, 2014. The state tests also include new tests for grades 3-8 and new high school exams, which are required for first-time for the class of 2018—students starting grade 9 after July 1, 2014.

Each new state test has two parts. The first is called performancebased and the second is called end-of-year. The student's scores on the two are combined to create a final score for each subject.

Students must provide an answer and explain how and why they chose it on the performance-based test. The end-of-year test requires students to select responses.

Districts have the option only in the 2014-2015 school year to give the tests on computers, in paper format or a combination of both by content level or grade level.

The Ohio Achievement Assessment will continue this year only for third-grade reading. The Ohio Graduation Tests will continue as one requirement for earning a high school diploma for the classes of 2015 through 2017.

The varsity football team is off to a 3-1 start this season and are currently ranked 10th in the Division IV region 13 computer points. They are on a quest to repeat as the Licking County League big-school division champions and to make the OHSAA football playoffs. Senior quarterback Tyler Nethers and senior receiver Damon Hupp continue to lead the team on both sides of the ball and junior running back Bailey Hayden leads the team in rushing.

The varsity volleyball team is currently 9-7 overall and 6-7 in the Licking County League. Of their seven losses, six of those matches have gone the maximum of five games. The LCL is an extremely tough volleyball league and we are continuing to compete well against the best in the league. Seniors Mackenzie Hoyt, Sierra McConnell and Carly Skeese are having solid seasons for the Panthers.

The boys soccer team has made tremendous strides once again this season. Their record is currently 1-7-1 overall and 1-3-1 in the Licking County League. Seniors Tanner Smith, Justin Rhymer and Zack Sammons are continuing to move the team in a positive direction.

The girls soccer team is currently 4-6 overall and 2-2 in Licking County League play. The team is led by seniors Sean Rice and Kori Caughenbaugh as well as freshmen Ashley Schmoll.

The girls golf team recently finished 3rd in the Licking County League tournament. Senior Tori Johnson was voted player of the year in the league as well as being on the all-league first team. Junior Morgan Gossett earned second team all-league and senior Haley Smith earned honorable mention all-league. In OHSAA sectional play on September 22nd, the girls team placed first and qualified for next week's district tournament. Tori Johnson lead the team with an 83 and Morgan Gossett had an 89.

The boys golf team placed 7th at the Licking County League tournament. Freshmen Griffin Hayden continues to play well in his first year of varsity action.

The cross country teams continue their march toward the Licking County League meet on October 11th at Watkins HS as well as the OHSAA district tournament on October 18th. Leading the boys is junior Griffin Butler who has won several meets including the Newark Invitational in a school -record time of 15:59.4 . The girls are lead by junior Raegan Donchess who is having a break out year placing in the top 10 in several events.

The first annual Licking Valley High School open house was a rousing success!

The event, held Tuesday, September 16th, provided an opportunity for LVHS parents to meet their students' teachers. Teachers discussed their classes, curriculum, content standards and grading system with parents.

In addition, Mr. Weaver hosted three well-attended sessions that featured information about the high school's grading system, which is in the midst of a multi-year transition. Later, parents and community members attended an informational session regarding state and Common Core standards in the auditorium.

"Our parents and teachers made this event an unqualified success," Weaver said. "It was a great reminder of how much parents care about the future of their students, and their learning here at the high school."

High school staff, along with the LVHS cafeteria and athletic department, created or donated many of the door prizes for the event. More than 25 prizes were given away in a raffle at the end of the evening; parents had an opportunity to boost their number of entries by visiting as many of their child's teachers as possible.

The LVHS Renaissance leadership class showed up in support of the event, creating signs and displays ahead of time and welcoming visitors throughout the evening. LVHS counselors finished off the evening with their annual Senior College Planning Night in the media center.

Parent feedback indicates that many wanted to hear first-hand about details of the high school's standards-based grading system and the transition to a new online gradebook.

"There are few things that are a bigger deal to high school parents and students than grades and grading," Weaver said. "A transition this big really challenges all of us to communicate and explain, and it will be a process that goes on for months and years.

"One of the things we all share as a common experience is high school," he said. "And grading has been the same in high school for a long time."

The Newark Advocate covered the Common Core curriculum session, in which Mr. Weaver talked about the evolution of Ohio's content standards and associated testing. The high school will be in a state of flux this year, as Ohio legislators left the former system (the OGTs) in place, even as new tests (end of-course exams in seven classes) begins for the class of 2018

"We're going to be doing a lot of testing this year," Weaver said. "We'll deal with it the best we can. Our kids have always responded to raised expectations, so I know that if the system is fair, we'll succeed within it."
